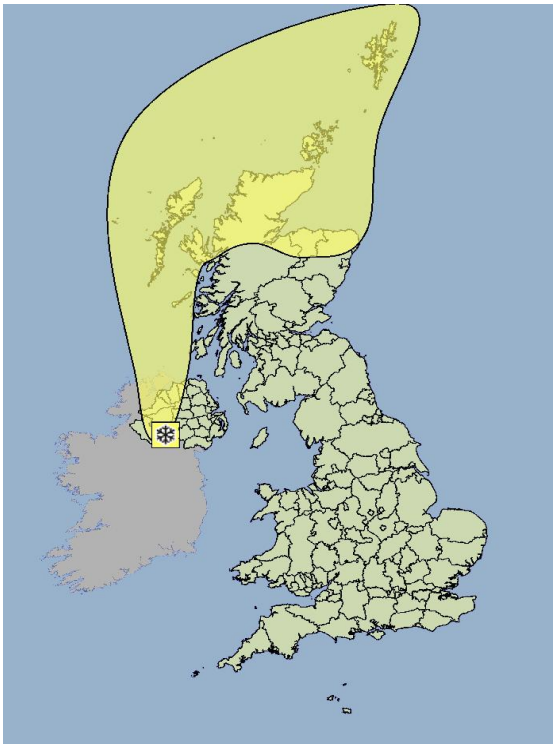
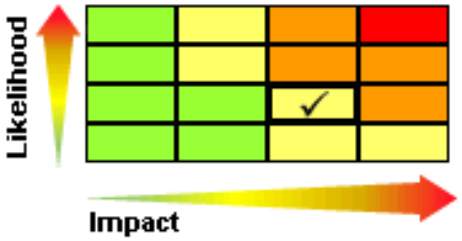
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A cold northerly airstream will remain in place across northern Britain throughout Friday, with snow showers affecting many areas, although perhaps less frequent in some locations south of high ground.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Fri, 13th Jan 2017 until 23:55 on Fri, 13th Jan 2017

Cold northerly winds will bring frequent snow showers throughout Friday. A further 2-5 cm of snow is possible, with an additional 10 cm across some higher ground. Further significant disruption to transport networks seems likely, although not all areas will be equally affected.

Ice, lightning and strong winds will continue to pose additional hazards across parts of the area with large waves affecting northeast coastal areas.

This warning has been updated to confine the main impacts to northern Scotland and the western side of Northern Ireland.
